The Business Brain Worksheet.

Fifteen questions that teach any AI to talk like your business — so the next draft it writes is one you would actually send.

THIS WORKSHEET BELONGS TO

How to use this worksheet

Untrained AI writes Dear [Client Name] … Investment: [Insert pricing]. AI that knows your business writes Hi Thabo … R148,000, our standard 50/50 terms. The difference is not a better model. It is context. These fifteen questions capture yours.

Fill it in — by hand or on screen

Short answers beat essays. One honest line per rule is worth more than a paragraph of general intentions. Done is what makes it work.

Assemble your Business Brain

Near the end of this worksheet there is a template. Copy it, drop your answers into the gold slots, and you are holding one paragraph that carries your whole business.

Paste it where the AI lives

Put it into your AI's memory once, and every future conversation starts already knowing you. The page before the template shows exactly where it goes.

> Why this works: AI is not guessing when it writes badly — it is averaging. It averages every business it has ever seen, because it does not know which one is yours. Give it the fifteen answers in here and the average collapses into one business: yours.

> A rule for the next hour: nothing you write here has to be perfect. It has to be true. AI fixes rough, true context easily; it cannot fix polished nonsense — and neither can we.

PART 1 OF 5

What you sell

AI cannot write a proposal for a business it cannot describe. Start here, because everything downstream — quotes, follow-ups, reports — borrows these answers.

Q1 What does your business actually do, in one sentence a client would understand?

No industry jargon. Write it the way you would say it across a table.

Q2 Which three to five things do clients pay you for most often?

Your money jobs. If AI only knows these, it already covers 80% of your admin.

Q3 What does a typical job look like, start to finish?

The milestones: enquiry → quote → deposit → work → handover → final payment. Your version of that chain.

PART 2 OF 5

Who you serve

Tone follows audience. AI writing for “everyone” sounds like no one. Define the reader and every sentence it writes gets sharper.

Q4 Who is your ideal client?

Industry, size, situation. “Owner-managed construction firms, 10–40 staff, tendering for the first time.”

Q5 What problem do they hire you to make go away?

The thing they complain about at dinner, in their own words if you can.

Q6 Who is NOT your client — what do you say no to?

This one keeps AI from writing desperate copy that chases the wrong work.

PART 3 OF 5

How you sound

Clients spot a ghostwritten email in one sentence. This part is what keeps the drafts AI writes sounding like you sent them — because in the end, you did.

Q7 Three words for how you want to sound.

e.g. plain, warm, direct. Or: precise, calm, no-nonsense. Pick yours.

Q8 Words or phrases you would never use — and ones you always use.

Never: “synergy”, “delve”, “at your earliest convenience”. Always: your greet, your sign-off, your name for the thing you sell.

Q9 Paste in a message you wrote that you were proud of.

An email, a quote intro, a WhatsApp reply that got the job. One real example teaches tone better than any adjective.

PART 4 OF 5

Money

This is where generic AI embarrasses itself and trained AI earns its keep. Numbers and terms here mean quotes and invoices come out correct, not invented.

Q10 How do you price — and what are the typical numbers?

Hourly, day rate, fixed per job, retainer. Give one or two real ranges so AI stops making figures up.

Q11 Payment terms you always use.

e.g. 50% deposit, 50% on handover. Invoice payable within 7 days. Your standard, written down.

Q12 What do you flex on, and what do you never budge on?

Where discounts are allowed, and the hill you will die on. AI negotiates better when it knows the fences.

PART 5 OF 5

Rules & edge cases

The last three questions are the guardrails. They are what stop a confident AI from promising something you cannot deliver, in your name.

Q13 What must AI never do or say in your name?

No guarantees of outcomes? No legal or tax advice? Never mention competitors? Never invent a client name? List it.

Q14 The questions clients always ask — and your standard answers.

Two or three is enough. AI answering these correctly on the first try is the moment people gasp.

Q15 The one thing that, if AI got it wrong, would embarrass you.

A misquoted price, the wrong client title, a broken promise. Name it, and AI will treat it as sacred too.

Where your Business Brain goes

One paste, in the right place, and every conversation from today starts already knowing your business. Pick your tool below — the template on the next page works in all of them.

ChatGPT

Settings → Personalization → Custom Instructions → “How would you like ChatGPT to respond?” — or drop it into any Project's instructions.

Claude

Start a Project → Project instructions → paste it there. Or simply make it the first message of a chat and say “remember this”.

Microsoft Copilot

Copilot in a work account: the custom instructions box in settings carries it across Word, Outlook and Excel.

Gemini

Saved Info in Gemini settings, or as the opening note of a Gem built for your business.

The test: once it is pasted, open a fresh chat and type “Write a follow-up message to a client who has gone quiet about their quote.” If the draft that comes back sounds like you, names real work, and uses your terms — your Business Brain is in. If not, the missing answer is almost always in Part 1 or Part 4.

Keep it alive: every time a client conversation teaches you something new — a phrase that lands, an objection you keep hearing, a price you got wrong — come back to this worksheet and update one line. The document is the asset. The AI just reads it.

Your Business Brain — paste this

Copy everything in the box. Replace each gold slot with your answer from the numbered question, and it is done. The slots take ten minutes with the worksheet finished; one of them is optional.

You are the AI assistant for [Q1: what the business does].

WHO WE SERVE
Our ideal client is [Q4: ideal client]. They hire us to make [Q5: the problem] go away. We do not serve [Q6: who you say no to].

WHAT WE DO
The work clients pay for most is [Q2: money jobs]. A typical job runs like this: [Q3: start to finish].

HOW I SOUND
Write [Q7: three words]. Never use [Q8: banned words].
Match the tone of this real example of mine: [Q9: sample message — optional].

MONEY
We price by [Q10: pricing + numbers], on terms of [Q11: payment terms]. We can flex on [Q12: flexible] but never on [Q12: never budge].

RULES
Never [Q13: what AI must never do]. When clients ask [Q14: common questions], answer with [Q14: your answers].
Above all, never get [Q15: the embarrassing one] wrong — ask me before assuming.

If anything I ask for needs a detail you do not have, ask me one short question instead of guessing.

You just did step one.

Fifteen answers and your AI writes like you. That is one document. Imagine what a whole day of building — with someone who has done this across dozens of businesses — does for the rest of the week: the proposals, the quotes, the follow-ups, the invoices, the reports. Not prompted from scratch every time. Running.
